Designed to serve as a research guide for students with a scholarly interest in the past and present behavior of Black Americans, this bibliography is organized into an "Introduction" and 21 sections dealing with the following topics: a general overview, the African heritage, slavery, post slavery adaptation and migration, ethnic group relations, discrimination and segregation, the civil rights movement, ethnic identity, community and neighborhood social structure, family, fertility, and household structure; education, socialization, and personality; language, literature, and folklore; religion, the expressive arts, economic behavior and economic status, political behavior and political status, Afro-American studies, biographies, newspapers and periodicals, bibliographies, and Afro-American studies programs. Broadly selective in make-up, this compilation is structured so as to enable students to readily familiarize themselves with the more important sources pertaining to Afro-Americans and at the same time to become cognizant of the breadth of material available. The categories into which this bibliography has been divided have been dictated largely by the amount of available literature devoted to each subject.

INTRODUCTION

Given the proliferation of published materials concerning Afro-Americans in recent years, it has become increasingly difficult for scholars to maintain a familiarity with all of these works. As if to make up for past deficits, authors have urgently published descriptions and analyses of nearly every aspect of behavior presumed to be characteristic of Afro-American. Although not all of these efforts have met generally acceptable standards of scholarship, a great deal of information pertaining to Blacks is now available for those who wish to do research in this area.

A Bibliography of Afro-American (Black) Studies is designed to serve as a research guide for students with a scholarly interest in the past and present behavior of Black Americans. Broadly selective in make-up, this compilation is structured so as to enable students to readily familiarize themselves with the more important sources pertaining to Afro-Americans and at the same time to become cognizant of the breadth of material available. The categories into which this bibliography has been divided have been dictated largely by the amount of available literature devoted to each subject. This organization facilitates a search for works which treat those aspects of the Afro-American experience which continue to receive the greatest attention from scholars and, at the same time, an index is suggested for indicating the variety and amount of research which has been devoted to these subjects.

Another feature which distinguishes this Afro-American studies bibliography is its inclusion of a list of additional bibliographies concerning Afro-American topics which are now available in most major libraries. These treat a wide range of subjects and should be consulted for literary works and others beyond the scope of this publication. Most municipal and university libraries also have general lists of their holdings which pertain to Afro-Americans. And, of course, most of the books and articles included in this bibliography have their own bibliographies or lists of references which may also be examined for guidelines.

Although entries in this bibliography have been cross-listed where appropriate, related categories should be scanned for additional publications that may be of value, depending on the specific interest of the researcher. Also, the Biography section may be consulted for materials relevant to most other categories. The section on newspapers and periodicals includes a list of those publications which are likely to frequently contain articles concerning socio-cultural aspects of Afro-Americans. The latest editions of history and social science journals should be examined for additional current research on the behavior of Afro-Americans.
